EXPLANATORY MEMORANDUM ON THE LAND MANAGEMENT COMMISSION BILL

1. BACKGROUND

- 1.1 The system of separate development inevitably required a multiplicity of institutions to survive until elections in 1994 when South Africa practically had 15 governments. These were the Republic of South Africa (central government); the four Provincial Administrations of the Cape of Good Hope, Natal, Orange Free State and Transvaal; the Republics of Transkei, Bophuthatswana, Venda and Ciskei (TBVC States); Self-Governing Territories (SGTs) of Gazankulu, Lebowa, KaNgwane, KwaNdebele, KwaZulu and QwaQwa. Each one of these governments owned immovable assets or land. Further the South African Native / Bantu / Development Trust (central government controlled entity) owned a substantial amount of land in these and other areas.
- 1.2 A considerable amount of land in the homelands and the former RSA territory was reserved for use by the South African Railways and Harbours (later TRANSNET), South African National Roads Agency Limited as well as the Post Office (South African Post Office SOC Ltd) and Telecommunication Services (Telkom SA Limited). The above entities have, through founding or legal succession legislation, sought to transfer the relevant land to themselves in freehold.
- 1.3 As political parties during pre-democracy negotiations sought to bring all the various forms of government into a single political system, they inevitably had to address and resolve the status of immovable assets that vested in such governments. A mechanism was consequently created in the Constitution to bring certainty regarding the ownership of immovable assets since the forms of governments that emerged after negotiations materially differed in form and in substance from those created by the apartheid system.

- 1.4 The mechanism referred to above is provided for in section 239 of the same Constitution (Interim Constitution) and is described as transitional arrangements for assets and liabilities.
- 1.5 Currently, whenever the State expresses a land need for its service delivery objectives, it is often reminded that it has a large property portfolio that it should start with. The true extent of this portfolio and its development potential remains unknown. There is therefore a need for an accurate record of all State land, constant research and analysis on the development potential of the State property portfolio so that assets that are in danger of degradation and total destruction can be timeously identified for corrective action.
- 1.6 In view of every state custodian having constructed their asset registers on the basis of electronic records, weaknesses exist in how custodians define, through policy, what they record in their assets registers hence possibilities exist for registered assets that no custodian is accounting for. There's consequently a need for that single entity that looks at every register land parcel for purposes of pulling together a universal inventory of State immovable assets. This responsibility can only be carried out if coupled with a compulsory disclosure regime on asset movements.
- 1.7 Many of the organizational and management problems confronting the existing management of state and publicly owned land, and the land reform programme reflect the legacy of land dispossession since 1913, subsequent discriminatory socio-economic policies and public investments, and the territorial segregation of society and political authority. Moreover, the democratic state inherited a fragmented state land administration and management system which assigns various land administration functions to the different spheres of government, which remain entrenched in the Constitution of the Republic of South Africa, 1996.

- 1.8 Possibly as a consequence of the existence of multiple approval authorities,. In some instances this affected persons who have passed mortgage bonds over their land parcels.
- 1.9 The challenge outlined above is at a larger scale and may therefore not be efficiently resolved with the existing common law mechanisms. The affected private parties, including government agencies, are generally innocent of circumstances they find themselves in hence there is no just reason to ask them to incur legal costs to reverse the situation. There's therefore a need for an empowering legislation that can create an administrative process for resolving the problem of double registration
- 1.10 In order to deal with the challenges outlined above, new legislation is required to address institutional weaknesses in state land management, and to address those instances where certain land parcels were registered in names of more than one owner.
